You understand and agree that there is a very high degree of risk involved in any market, trading or investing activity and fully understand and accept that people can and often do lose money. Past performance results of any individual trades or trader published, posted, discussed or taught on the web site or in any of the chat rooms or the training room or over the telephone are not indicative of future returns using that same method of trading nor by that same nor any other trader, including you, in the future and similar returns may not be realized by you in the future. Performance results have many inherent limitations, some of which are described below. No representation is being made that any account or individual trader will or is likely to achieve profits or losses similar to those shown, described, posted, taught or discussed in the chat rooms, training rooms or over the telephone. In fact, there are frequently sharp differences between individual trading results between other traders exposed to the same information or posts and the actual trades taught or used as an example in the postings or teachings in the chat rooms, the training room or over the telephone. In addition, hypothetical trading does not involve financial risk and no hypothetical trading can completely account for the impact of financial risk in actual trading, for example, the ability to withstand losses or adhere to a particular trading methodology, strategy or program in spite of trading losses are material points which can also adversely affect actual trading results. There are numerous other factors related to the markets in general or to the implementation of any specific trading method, strategy or program which cannot be fully accounted for, all of which can adversely affect actual trading results.

The methodologies, indicators, strategies and all other features of the www.quantumstocktrading.com chat and training rooms (hereinafter collectively referred to as the "Information") is provided for informational and educational purposes only and should not be construed as investment or trading advice.

You should not rely solely on the information taught, posted or discussed in the chat or training rooms in making any trade or investment decisions. Rather, you should use the information only as an educational guide and as a starting point for your learning and understanding of the markets and for conducting additional independent research in order to allow you to form your own opinion regarding your own trading or investing. There is always the potential of losing money when you invest in any financial products. Investors should consider their investment objectives and risks carefully before investing. Options transactions involve a high degree of risk. Please review the options disclosure document entitled the Characteristics and Risks of Standardized Options available through about.robinihood.com/legal or theocc.com to learn more about the risks associated with options trading.

All investments have risks associated with them. For example, investors in equities run the risk that the market as a whole could decline, dragging otherwise healthy stocks with it. Bond investors could see their income get chipped away by rising inflation. Both types of investors could experience a changing legal and regulatory requirement that could detrimentally impact their portfolio. Many times an investor will assume one type of risk in the effort of avoiding another. For instance, an investor may have fled the volatile market for the safety of fixed income, only to be left on the sidelines should the market experience a significant rebound. While risk is unavoidable, it can be managed. Diversification is one powerful tool in managing risk in a portfolio; a balanced portfolio distributes the various types of risk over a basket of securities.

Maintaining a relationship with a knowledgeable Advisor is another way to lessen the impact of risk; your Advisor can help you in the security selection process, and will help you monitor your portfolio's performance.

The following list highlights various types of risk:

Capital Risk: the risk that the investor will not fully recover his/her entire investment. Options and other speculative investments have a high degree of this type of risk, while quality short-term investments such as Treasury bills enjoy minimal capital risk.

Selection Risk: put simply, the risk of choosing a security that will perform worse than other available securities.

Timing Risk: the risk of buying or selling at an inopportune time, thus limiting profit or incurring a loss.

Legislative Risk: the risk that future legislation will impact today's investment decisions. Federal, state and local laws or regulations may change without notice, possibly impacting a security's performance.

Liquidity Risk: the risk that, should the quality or desire of a particular investment decrease, the holder will have a difficult time selling.

Market Risk: the risk that the value of a security will decline due to overall market conditions, not by any fault of the issuing company.

Credit Risk: the risk that the issuer may become unable to pay interest and/or principal when due on fixed income securities. U.S. Government securities are the least likely to default on payments, while "junk" bonds have a high degree of credit risk.

Inflationary Risk: the risk that inflation will reduce the purchasing power of a dollar over time. Equity securities tend to provide the best protection against this type of risk, while bonds are more susceptible due to their fixed income and possible long-term exposure to rises in inflation.

Interest Rate Risk: the risk that, as interest rates rise, a bond investor's holdings will decline as more attractive offerings enter the market. The longer the maturity on the bond, the greater the risk. Some stocks are susceptible to this type of risk as well (companies that borrow for financing operations will see less profit should the cost of borrowing increase; this will decrease their stock price).

Reinvestment Risk: the risk that a bondholder will be unable to reinvest interest payments at a rate equaling the yield-to-maturity. Zero-coupon bonds do not have this type of risk.

Options are not suitable for all investors. There are risks involved in any option strategy. Individuals should not enter into option transactions until they have read and understood the option disclosure document titled "Characteristics and Risks of Standardized Options," which outlines the purposes and risks of option transactions.
